Mountaingreen cracks down on 'cruising' teens

By NANCY WALLACE
Staff Writer

Merchants in Upland's Mountaingreen Shopping Center, awaiting the rush of Christmas shoppers, have hired off-duty Upland police officers to end West End youths' "cruising" there.

John Munoz, president of the Mountaingreen merchants' association, said the congregating teen-agers haven't caused great problems thus far, but merchants want the "cruising" eliminated before Christmas shoppers arrive.

"The kids had started getting out of hand again," Munoz said. Cruising reached its zenith in the summer of 1980 when teens from throughout the West End would come each Friday and Saturday night to "party."

Cruising then, and now, consisted of parking rather than driving. Youths would sit in or on their cars, drink beer and generally fraternize. Many youths told The Daily Report that the Mountaingreen parking lot was the only place teens could socialize in large numbers.

Their socializing kept customers away and, when they didn't leave at summer's end, the merchants turned to the police for help. "It took us all the way through Christmas to get it (cruising) under control," Capt. Gary Hart recalled.

The cooler fall weather doesn't deter the teens, he said. Loitering citations, however, do.

And the officers are issuing the citations once more.

Munoz said the Mountaingreen merchants tried private security agencies, but they couldn't threaten the teens with loitering citations and were ineffective. The merchants then realized they must have police protection.

So when the youths began congregating again this summer, they decided to make an agreement with the Police Department.

Off-duty officers are paid by the merchants to control the cruising. They put barricades in the lot to keep traffic moving. If people must park after most stores close at 9 p.m., they park near the restaurants and theaters.

Munoz said that after three weekends the police have virtually eliminated the cruising and partying.

The costs of security and vandalism have hurt many Mountaingreen businesses, already troubled by the poor economy. "You have to pay to keep it safe for the customers," Munoz explained. "It (police protection) is more expensive, yes, but it works."

With holiday shopping days nearing, the merchants decided to put an end to the customer complaints and mushrooming rumors that Mountaingreen was an unsafe place in the evening. They realized they couldn't afford not to pay for the added security, Munoz explained.

"It's getting to that time of year where we can't afford to take any chances," he said. "It wasn't a big problem, but if you have police security, it eliminates the problem," Munoz noted.

"You can't afford to gamble."

A charity fund-raiser art auction and wine-cheese party will be held Nov. 13 at 5478 Moreno Plaza in Montclair, co-sponsored by the Mental Health Association West and the Rotary Club of Upland.

The art work can be viewed from 7 to 8 p.m., with the auction following.

The Rotary Club of Upland will use its portion of the proceeds toward its project to erect a display and shelter building at the Chaffey Communities Cultural Center in Upland to house antique orange grove equipment.

The admission fee also will help finance the Mental Health Association West's outreach. The Mental Health Association West is governed by a board of directors, with Carol Featherstone as president and Betty Hinds as executive director.

Core funding for the organization comes from San Bernardino County with the MHA West's mission being information and referral. On-going services include an activity center, which offers recreation, socialization and group support for the chronically ill.

MHA West also has an Ups and Downs group for manic-depressives, a patients' rights advocacy program and a new Be-Friend program. A monthly cable television program features interviews with local experts in the mental health field, and workshops also are held on subjects pertaining to mental health.

Many of the association's projects are carried out in cooperation with other civic, educational and service organizations such as the Ontario Community Hospital.

For more information on the art auction, call Jo Anne Travers of the Mental Health Association West at 982-2804 or George Renworth, president of the Rotary Club of Upland, at 985-1864.

Building activity drags along in West End, except in Chino

Except for a large gain in Chino and slight increases posted by Rancho Cucamonga and Fontana, building activity throughout the West End slowed considerably during September.

Chino totaled $2,562,366 in building permits issued in September, the bulk of that ($2,265,600) coming from two industrial buildings.

That was more than a $2 million increase over September of 1980 when only $376,573 worth of permits were issued in Chino.

Ontario recorded the largest amount of permits ($3,130,264) of all the municipalities in the West End, but that was considerably less than the $11,828,329 posted in September of a year ago.

Twenty-one condominium units valued at $972,493 and two industrial projects worth a total of $799,991 topped Ontario's permits in September.

Rancho Cucamonga and Fontana each recorded slight increases over a year ago.

Rancho Cucamonga had permits worth $1,354,126 this September compared to $1,081,900 for the same month last year. It issued four permits for single-family dwellings valued at $410,400 and for two industrial buildings valued at $399,600.

Fontana recorded $2,369,930 in permits this September, a $200,000 increase over the $2,155,140 worth of permits issued a year ago.

Along with Ontario, Upland and Montclair both posted total valuations less than a year ago.

Upland issued permits worth $733,887 this year compared to $2,328,358 in September 1980. Perhaps a reflection of one of the hottest summers on record, the greatest value for permits issued in Upland was $184,000 for 20 swimming pools.

Montclair had permits worth $159,109 this September compared to $1,481,491 a year ago.

Despite a slow September and a general slowdown in the overall economy, West End cities are continuing to maintain building levels comparable to a year ago.

Upland has posted the biggest increase for the January through September period with a total of $34,957,396 worth of permits, nearly double the $17,571,509 recorded for the same nine-month period of 1980.

Upland Police warning against phone solicitors

Upland police officers are urging residents to buy plenty of tickets to their Christmas benefit, but also are warning them about inevitable imposter salespersons.

Ed Gray, president of the Upland Police Officers' Association, said his association has hired J and J Productions to supervise ticket sales to the annual benefit show.

J and J will conduct sales through phone solicitors, and imposter solicitors are expected to try to take residents' donations again this year, he said.

"We know it will happen every year," Gray said. He hopes to combat the problem this year through public awareness.

In the past, imposters pretending to collect donations for anon-profit agency have called residents, Gray explained. Instead of asking that checks be made out to the organization, residents have been asked to make a check payable to an individual or to give cash to someone sent to their door.

Gray said residents should immediately alert Upland police at 946-7624 if anyone calls asking for cash, or for checks made out to anything except the Upland Police Officers' Association.

"It is possible to get them," he said of the offenders. "We catch them every year." They catch some, he added, but not all. Others escape with "donations," often without the donors knowing they have been conned.

Gray said many people are aware of these scams and so won't donate to any phone-solicitor fundraising campaign. "Yeah, it kind of hurts us," Gray noted, adding there is little the association can do to prevent the problem.

The association is selling a book of tickets for $15; donors may keep the tickets, or give them back to the association which will distribute them to needy children.

The benefit show is set for Dec. 19 at Chaffey High School.

Chaffey workers accept contract

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

Averting the possibility of a work stoppage, classified employees in the Chaffey Joint Union High School District accepted a revised contract offer from district negotiators Thursday.

Meeting at Montclair High School, nearly 200 of the district's 300 classified employees voted to accept a contract offer that will give them a 6 percent pay raise, changes in their grievance procedure and increases in the salary base pay for instructional aides.

In what the employees considered a "sweetener" to the offer, the district gave them a non-negotiated holiday on Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday.

Last week, members of the California School Employees Association local rejected what they believed to be the district's "last and best" offer.

There was some talk of a work stoppage at the time. However, no action was ever formally taken or recommended. Instead, the unit's negotiators gave members a week-long "cooling down" period.

During that time negotiators met twice. The first meeting on Monday did little to change the employees' position, but during a late-night meeting Wednesday a new proposal from the district received favorable response from the unit.

Members of the employee bargaining team unanimously recommended approval of the offer, which is retroactive to July 1, 1981.

"I think it's a reasonable package," said the unit's president Mike Benner. "We felt that maybe there was 1 or 2 percent left for pay raises but we would have had to walk to get it."

Of the 194 members voting, 177 approved of the offer; 17 opposed it.

"I'm not surprised," Benner said after the vote. "We went back and told them (district negotiators) we had rejected the first offer and they came back with a better proposal."

Although there was no movement on across-the-board salary hikes (the district did, however, improve on its original offer of a 5 percent salary increase), the employees considered changes in the grievance and salary range proposals to be just as significant.

The district's offer names the employees' immediate supervisor

(who is not a member of the bargaining unit) as the first to receive a grievance.

Currently, the definition of grievance allows an employee but not the bargaining unit to file a grievance. The offer will allow the association to file grievances in cases of unit recognition, employee rights, employee association rights, reopening of negotiations, terms of the contract and with the grievance procedure itself.

Employees are also given 20 days after discovering that an action has been taken against them to file a grievance under the new proposal.

The current contract requires that a grievance be filed 30 days after the act occurs.

"The problem with that," said CSEA field representative John Hamilton, "was that an employee might not have known about the act until it was too late."

Changes will also boost approximately 80 instructional aides two steps on the district's salary range, giving them approximately 6 percent in additional salary increases.

In addition, the employees will be allowed to take two of their personal leave days off without submitting a reason to their supervisors.

The Martin Luther King holiday falls on Jan. 15.

"The important things were the changes to the grievance procedure and the raises to instructional aides," Benner said. "That's a significant increase to their salary."

Hamilton credited state mediator Draza Mrvichin for keeping the talks going.

"We attempted to put this meeting together, the district agreed and he (Mrvichin) agreed to come. He did a real fine job putting us together," Hamilton said.

District personnel director Dean Smothers said the salary increase will cost approximately $300,000. In addition, increases in the salary range for aides will cost between $10,000 and $15,000. Increased costs in medical premiums, which had already been negotiated, will also increase the cost to the district, Smothers said.

"These are just ballpark figures now," he added. "We really don't have it all figured out yet."

Smothers estimated the package will cost the district an additional 9 percent for classified employees.

"We feel pretty good about it," he added.

Dreier urges ban on trade with Libya

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Calling his legislation a "moral imperative," local Congressman David Dreier has introduced a resolution to ban virtually all U.S. trade with Libya, including purchase of oil.

Dreier, a strong supporter of Ronald Reagan, parted company with the president in introducing the measure, HR 4866. Reagan has said an embargo on oil imports from Libya would be ineffective because other nations would buy the 200,000 barrels of oil a day now going to the United States.

Dreier, R-35th District, disagreed, saying, "The present world oil production surplus presents the United States with a unique opportunity to wean itself from its current dependence on Libyan oil."

In other comments, he said Tuesday's defeat of Proposition K in West Covina — a measure to ban further dumping of toxic waste at the BKK Corp. landfill there — has not changed his thinking on the issue.

Dreier's call for the closure of the BKK dump figured prominently in his successful campaign last year to unseat Democrat Jim Lloyd.

However, he said he stayed out of the campaign on Proposition K, calling it a local issue.

Dreier's HR 4866 is one of several similar measures introduced in Congress since U.S. jets shot down attacking Libyan fighters and Libya reacted jubilantly to the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Dreier's resolution would stop all Libyan exports to the United States and all U.S. exports, except food and medicine, to Libya.

He said, "Libya, in conjunction with the Soviet Union and Cuba, has spawned a network of violent international criminals whose sole function is to destabilize legitimate regimes and undermine western interests."

"Libya's bloodied hands can be seen in the Caribbean, Central America, the Middle East and throughout the African continent."

While U.S. imports account for more than 40 percent of Libya's oil revenues, the imports make up only 2.9 percent of total domestic deliveries, Dreier said.

He added that the United States should take advantage of the current glut in the world oil supply to start the embargo. Conservation and negotiations with Mexico for new supplies of oil would also help pick up the slack, he said.

Dreier said that even if there is a market elsewhere for Libyan oil the United States should not help "finance terrorism." He called Libya's celebration of Sadat's assassination "anathema to all this nation stands for."

He noted Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., is sponsoring a Senate version of the legislation. Dreier said his resolution gives Reagan more flexibility.

Under his resolution, the president could end the boycott should he "determine and certify to Congress" that Libya has ceased its role in terrorist activities or that the embargo poses a threat to U.S. national security.

On Proposition K in West Covina, Dreier conceded that he was criticized in 1980 for intruding upon what some saw as a local issue. The congressman made closure of the BKK dump a major issue, and his campaign brochures on the subject stirred controversy.

He said he was approached by both sides in the campaign to stop toxic-waste dumping at BBK, but added, "In talking to sponsors of the measure, I convinced them that I as a member of Congress shouldn't intervene, dictate so to speak."

Dreier said he addressed the issue in 1980 because of the "regional impact" of toxic-waste disposal, but considered the measure a local issue.

"It's a very fine line, you're right," he said.

Dreier said he is continuing to look for alternative sites.

Relatives of Lidocaine poisoning victim file suit

The family of Estel Jones, who died of Lidocaine poisoning and whose death is one of 28 investigated as suspicious, has filed a $1 million wrongful death suit against Chino Community Hospital and his two doctors.

The 62-year-old heart patient died March 25 in the intensive care unit of Chino Community Hospital. The civil suit alleges his death was caused by negligence of the hospital and doctors Frank S. Hsu and Donald H. Cohen.

The suit also names as defendants Medox, a nursing registry company, and 30 individuals not listed by name in the suit.

The lawsuit is the second so far to be filed as a result of an investigation into 28 suspicious deaths of hospital patients in San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

Earlier last week, the family of Irene Graham of Perris sued Community Hospital of the Valleys and the woman's doctor for $1.5 million. The 89-year-old woman's death has also been attributed to an overdose of Lidocaine, a heart relaxant.

Sophisticated medical studies, performed by a prestigious laboratory in Utah, of the tissues of hospital patients who died suspiciously indicated that 12 of the 28 deaths were caused by overdoses of the drug.

San Bernardino and Riverside authorities are continuing their investigations, now in the seventh month. No arrests have been made.

Investigators interviewed nurse Robert Diaz of Apple Valley, who treated a number of the patients, but have not named him as a suspect.

In the wrongful death suit filed by Jones' wife, Betty, the defendants are alleged to have "so negligently, carelessly and in violation of the law treated and entrusted the treatment of (Jones) so as to cause him to receive an overdose of a substance known as Lidocaine, which caused him to die."

Jones' death is the only San Bernardino County case.

Voter turnout extremely light

Twenty-two incumbents retained their seats on school boards and water and fire districts in 18 contested elections throughout the valley last Tuesday night.

But seven incumbents, including two on the Upland school board and the Monte Vista Water board, lost their bids for re-election.

School officials estimated the overall turnout in the valley at between 15 and 20 percent of the eligible voters.

Computer problems in both Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties caused several hours of delay in the vote count. Semi-official finals did not become available until Wednesday.

The major cliffhanger of the night was in the Pomona school board election where incumbent Frances Livingston defeated challenger Nancy McCracken by four votes, setting up a possible recount.

A major loser was Frances Maschio who had been appointed to an unexpired term on the Mt. San Antonio College District last year after two unsuccessful attempts to win elections. She was defeated by challenger Barbara Booth by a 2-1 margin.

Works Board buys Chino Hills park property

The state Public Works Board has approved the first purchases of land in Chino Hills for a proposed state park, clearing the way for acquisition of 2,237 acres at a cost of nearly $8.73 million.

After earlier delays by the board, approval came Friday in Sacramento. Adriana Gianturco, director of the California Department of Transportation and one of the three board members, cast the key vote.

Gianturco dissented in the 2-1 vote in September to approve buying Chino Hills park land, citing the state's financial straits. Board decisions must be unanimous.

In mid-October, the board again delayed approval of the Chino Hills purchases along with many other park projects. Led by Gianturco, the board asked the state Department of Finance for clarification of an executive order by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. to hold up capital outlays.

Although the land purchases will be financed initially by borrowing from the state's beleaguered general fund, the board received assurances Friday that the executive order did not cover the acquisition of the park land.

The board approved purchase of three parcels of land, one more than it had considered at past meetings.

These parcels are the 1,222-acre Rolling M Ranch property in San Bernardino County and two parts, 1,014 acres in all, of the Jameson trust property in Orange and San Bernardino counties.

Bane and Aliso canyons run through the Rolling M Ranch. Upper Telegraph Canyon runs through the Jameson trust property.

Ken Mitchell, chief of land acquisition for the state Department of Parks and Recreation, said Monday the two parts of the Jameson trust property apparently have different owners. The state just recently reached an agreement to buy 572 acres for $1,715,000 as the second Jameson parcel.

Other agreements call for the state to pay $5,683,500 for the Rolling M Ranch property and $1,330,000 for the other 442 acres of the Jameson trust property.

Mitchell said the Department of Parks and Recreation will pick up checks from the state controller's office. The sales must also be recorded by the counties before they are final.

To finance the land purchases, the department will dip into its allocation from the state's general fund, Mitchell said. The department will, in effect, borrow money internally until bonds can be sold.

The Legislature allocated $10.8 million toward purchases of park land in Chino Hills. California voters approved the sale of $285 million in bonds last November to expand state and local parks.

But none of those bonds have been sold. The Legislature recently raised the ceiling on the bond interest to 11 percent, a figure still too low to attract investors so far in today's money market.

Mitchell said he knew of no bill pending that would raise the bond ceiling again.

However, the state is continuing negotiations for a fourth parcel, some 1,300 acres in Lower Telegraph Canyon adjacent to Carbon Canyon Regional Park in Orange County.

The eventual status of the Chino Hills park land has yet to be decided by the state, but it will most likely be a state park, Mitchell said. The site has no official name for now.

The mesquite bush is not a weed after all

By CLIFF SMITH
Copley News Service

The key to a revolutionary kind of agriculture may have been found in the lowly desert mesquite shrub.

Soil researchers in Riverside, Calif., have discovered that mesquite is in the wondrous class of "nitrogen fixation" plants that make their own fertilizer in abundance.

This in itself suggests the possibility of cultivating mesquite as a cheap "energy farm" crop, for charcoal and fermentation to alcohol, on desert wastelands too harsh for other crops.

Researchers are even more excited at finding that the bacteria on mesquite roots, which enable the shrub to make fertilizer, are five times as salt-tolerant as other such bacteria.

This suggests transplanting the salt-tolerant bacteria to nitrogen-fixing crop plants, such as alfalfa and peanuts, for improved crop productivity in saline soils.

Other crop plants that may readily host the beneficial bacteria include garden peas, black-eyed peas and all of the beans, including the prolific and multipurpose soybean.

Salt buildup in irrigated Southwestern soils is a serious and growing problem and the development of salt-tolerant crop plants is being hurried as a partial solution.

The first evidence that mesquite manufactures its own nitrogen fertilizer came recently from Wesley Jarrell and Ross Virginia, soil scientists at University of California, Riverside.

After first establishing the plant's capability under greenhouse conditions, Virginia said, it was demonstrated that wild plants in the desert add surprising amounts of nitrogen to surrounding soil.

"Most desert soils where mesquite does not grow contain less than 10 parts per million of nitrate," Virginia said in an interview. "In mesquite areas, we found an average of 300 parts per million of nitrate and up to 900 parts per million."

In one area near the Salton Sea, in Southern California, the researchers found that mesquite had added about 1,600 pounds of nitrate per acre to the soil — enough natural nitrogen fertilizer to support corn production for five years.

"Most of the food produced in Southern California is grown on the desert," Jarrell noted. "But that has demanded high applications of water and fertilizer, practices which are costly in energy and dollars."

"Mesquite potentially represents a new kind of agriculture based on perennial crops which have adapted to a harsh environment."

Ironically, mesquite until recently was classified by the U.S. Department of Agriculture as a "noxious weed."

Cattle and sheep ranchers had tried for generations to eliminate dense stands of mesquite in Texas, Arizona and New Mexico because the shrubs compete with grasses for water and sunlight, reducing grazing areas. But mesquite remained a robust survivor.

By sending its roots down over 50 feet deep, mesquite can thrive even in areas where temperatures reach 140 degrees, rainfall is limited to three inches a year and soil water is nearly as salty as the ocean.

Today there still are between 60 and 70 million acres of mesquite, Virginia said, in Southern California, Arizona and Texas, the three states where the plant is most abundant. Because of the Riverside research findings, mesquite has been removed from the federal government's undesirable weed list.

Jarrell suggested that mesquite could be minimally cultivated on arid and fallow land in many parts of the world for food and fuel. He noted that early Southwestern Indians survived on mesquite for six months out of the year, eating the pods and grinding the seeds for flour and flatcakes.

He said the dense wood of mesquite has a high heat value and is now being harvested in Mexico for charcoal being marketed in Southern California. He said mesquite pods contain up to 50 percent sugar and can be fermented into ethanol, a form of alcohol, for clean-burning automotive fuel.

The biological process that provides the enormous amounts of nitrogen required by plants in making their proteins is called nitrogen fixation. In nature, atmospheric nitrogen is fixed — that is, converted to ammonia, a form of nitrogen that can be utilized by plants — by hundreds of different kinds of microorganisms, mostly bacteria.

Most of the microbes performing their essential job in forests, fields and ocean are independent entities that work alone and contribute relatively little nitrogen to the soil.

One genus of bacteria called rhizobium is nearly 100 times more effective in converting atmospheric nitrogen to fertilizer than other types because it works in symbiotic cooperation with certain plants, mostly the legumes.

In their working partnership, the rhizobial bacteria infect the roots of the plant and draw energy from their host. In exchange, the bacteria synthesize an enzyme, nitrogenase, that triggers nitrogen fixation and supplies the host with the fertilizer it needs.

Just how the nitrogenase enzyme chemically converts atmospheric nitrogen to ammonia is still a puzzle and the subject of much intense research in laboratories all over the world.

The fundamental problem of fixing nitrogen is one of cleaving the nitrogen molecule. Nitrogen atoms come in pairs, locked together by a chemical bond that is the second strongest in nature, being exceeded only by the one holding a carbon monoxide molecule together.

One tempting scheme is to develop synthetic nitrogen-fixing catalysts that work at low temperatures and atmospheric pressures. That would make the production of commercial ammonia fertilizer cheap.

The commercial process is expensive because it is energy-intensive. Some 40 billion tons of ammonia a year is produced by heating the ingredients — hydrogen from natural gas and nitrogen from air — to temperatures of over 900 degrees Fahrenheit under pressures of over 13,000 pounds per square inch.
